Previous Reports Confirmed. Shortly before 12 o'clock the Govphone message from the Baldwin Detective Agency, in Roanoke, verifying in every detail the exclusive story printed by The Journal to the effect that a gang of mountaineers had looted a hardware store at Mount Airy, N. C., of a quantity of arms and ammunition, and that Floyd Allen, his son, Victor, and a member of the Allen gang named Strickland had been arrested and placed in iail.

The agency also notified the Governor that members or friends of the Allen gang had attempted to wreck the telegraph line leading out of Hills-ville. However, at that time the con-nection between Hillsvill and the out-side world had not been completely severed. The detectives feared that the line would soon be broken. It was then in such bad condition, he said, that but little information could be received over it. [This statement is certainly true as regards the service to Richmond.—Ed.]

Asked how the mountaineers had attacked the wires, he said that they and china insulators along the line, and had seriously injured the wires.

That the line would be broken has been feared since the Allens escaped Circuit Court of Appeals and procured into the mountains yesterday. But a thin thread of wire connects Hillsville with the rest of the world-one soutary wire, it is said-and if that should e broken the community, buried as it is in the mountains, would be al-most completely cut off from the outside world, and the Allen gang could descend upon it and wreak dreadful vengeance for the wounding and cap-ture of their leader, and no one in Richmond or elsewhere could learn of it until hours later.

The Baldwin detective also said that

Governor Mann today telegraphed to Governor Kitchin, of North Carolina, asking his operation and suggesting that the Carolina Governor communicate with the officers of the border counties named and urged them to their best endeavors.

The report comes from Mount Airy, N. C., today that a hardware store there was broken into last night by two men, who took all the firearms and ammunition. These robbers are believed to be two of the Allen crowd. Whether they are trying to escape into the Carolina mountains or are preparing to stand against the officers in their own mountains is a matter of speculation.

Judge Staples, of Roanoke, who has been appointed by the Governor to hold court at Hillsville, and Attorney General Williams reached Pulaski at 7 o'clock this morning and took the train for Betty Baker, Va., from which place they will have a ten-mile ride on horseback over the mountains to the county seat of Carroll in a steady downpour of rain, with the mud, it is said, a foot or more deep.

ed Declaration.

R I C H M O N D, VA—Special.—
Carroll county, the theater of the frightful outlawry of the Allen gang, is one of eight or more Virginia counties named after patriots of the Revolutionary period, though in point of years it is quite youthful. The county was established in 1842 and today has a population of 21,116.

Ten years before the organization of the Virginia county, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, Md., went to his reward at the ripe age of ninety-five. This Charles Carroll, after whom the Virginia county is named, was a famous man in his day. And his day was a pretty long one, too, as may be judged from the length of time he lived.

Fox six years before his passing he had the distinction of being the only surviving signer of the Declaration of independence.

Appointed to the Congress July 4, 1776, he signed the declaration with others August 2d. As he did so a colleague remarked: "There goes several millions," and added, "but there are other Charles Carrolls and the British will not know which it is." At this the Marylander added the identifying words "of Carrollton," which have kept their place as a part of his name.

Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, filled several important offices and served a long time in Congress. He was a commissioner to settle the Virginia boundary question in 1799, and in 1810 retired from public life. In his ninety-first year, July 4th, he laid the cornerstone of the Baltimore and Ohio Rall-road.

Just what connection Carroll had with the section now hearing his name.

Just what connection Carroll had with the section now bearing his name is not clearly set forth in the literature available today. Howe's history, the usual source of such information, was first printed in 1845 and contains only a brief reference to Carroll county.

SUICIDE FUTILE

Southern Railway main line has reached here since 11 A. M. yesterday, and there is a great congestion of passenger and freight traffic.

The paralysis is due to washouts, slides, bridges swept away and submersion of trackage. Ten trains are overdue, all through passenger. The Richmond division is interrupted by the washing away of several hundred feet of roadbed near Ringgold, eight miles eastward, where trains have to transfer passengers and mails. On the Norfolk division the tieup is even worse, no trains having arrived from worse, no trains having arrived from Norfolk for twenty-four hours, save one detoured via Chase City and Keys-ville, and then having to transfer at Ringgold. On the Danville and Western traffic completely tied up by the destruction of the trestle approach to the railway bridge over the Dan at Leakesville Junction, eight miles westward. The trestle was washed away during the night.

Trains from the west are running from Stuart to that point. Railway officials can form no idea of the extent of the damage yet, but are working like beavers in efforts to reopen the lines. The delay means immense loss, in addition to the actual destruction wrought. The western section and the scale approach to the section with the section was a section when the section wh and the grade approach to the county bridge over Dan river, just west of the city, was destroyed during the night.

Almost every bridge over the smaller streams of the county has been swept away, and it is impossible for farmers to reach the city.

Rural telephone and telegraph lines in many directions are deranged several telephone and telegraph lines.
